man with whom she is involved is punished just as was the first convicted offender. If she has been publicly exposed several times as a prostitute, the men of her bone kidnap her, carry her into the mountains, and there kill her and hide her body. No notice is taken of her absence, and if the councillors hear about the affair they pretend not to have done so.

If a woman catches her husband in the act of adultery with another woman, she ordinarily goes back to her own people and tells them of it. The men of her family, her father, brothers, or paternal uncle, may bring the matter up before the councillors and have the husband fined and divorced. In many cases, however, the men of her vein persuade the woman to do nothing about it, thinking that to make a commotion would only cause the disruption of the bone. In case the woman has married outside her bone, whether or not action takes place depends largely upon the respect which her own bone has for that of her husband. In any case, the sacramental defilement of the man is not considered as great as that of the woman in the opposite situation.

Blood money. Although murders, woundings, and adultery caught in the act are offenses beyond the jurisdiction of the council of the great and are relegated to the tribal council, one consequence of them falls directly upon the councillors. This is the assessment and collection of the diith, or blood money. Whereas the tribal council has the right to impose the fine, the council of the great has charge of compensation to the injured family. This takes place after the tribal council has finished its judgment and punishment. Murder is atoned for by the payment of a sum between one and five hundred dollars. The amount varies from canton to canton, but within a canton is constant and inflexible. Wounds are paid for at the rate of twenty-five dollars a month for each month of convalescence, until the injured man is able to work again.

The man who committed the crime pays, if he is able. If he is unable to raise the money by selling his property, the bone pays. In some bones the group as a whole always pays, whether the guilty one is able to raise the money or not; in others a man other than the guilty one pays, with the understanding that he is to receive the total of the next blood-money payment to his bone.

In the bones which pay individually, receipts are given to the children of the deceased, and if he left no children, to his father. Children receive the money on the basis that one boy is equal to two girls. If the deceased leaves neither children nor father, it is divided among the members of the bone. Many bones refuse altogether to receive blood money, preferring to take it out in blood by killing a member of the hostile bone, in which case, after the punishment of the tribal council is finished, the account is considered by the councillors as settled. Frequently the injured bone accepts the blood money, then suffers a revulsion of feeling and takes blood vengeance in addition, in which case it is required to return the payment.

Murders within the bone rarely occur, and are considered unnatural crimes. No blood money is assessed, because such an offender is instantly killed by his own people if he is unable to escape. A man fleeing such a crime will not be harbored by any Riffian, and must continue until he has left the Rif altogether. Even in this case he must take care to go to some place to which Riffians do not ordinarily travel, lest revenge overtake him later.

Attending weddings outside the canton. Another duty of the council of the great, this time of a bloodless nature, is to attend weddings of other councillors or their sons in other cantons or fifths. This is done in order to foster friendly relations between the two groups.

721 Beni Bu Yafer has fought internally upon a number of occasions, but the other groups
727 do not interfere, since they have learned from experience that the Beni Bu Yafer do not submit until after an arduous struggle, at the end of which they do not possess enough property to pay a fine worth the trouble of interfering. In consequence of this, they are not allowed to send their councillors to other tribes.

For a considerable period of time there has been no fighting worthy of intervention in Mazuza, Ait Shisher, or Kebdana; this is perhaps due to the early influence of the Spaniards upon these regions.

When the fighting is in Beni Bu Yahyi or Metalsa no councillors bother to go, since the land is too difficult to travel in, and since there are no houses to burn, and no property to confiscate which cannot readily be moved away before their arrival. Banditry has always [579 been rife among these tribes, and active feuds between bones perpetual. Theft, in the Rif ●674] considered a crime unless practiced outside the tribe and its allies, is among the nomads an honorable profession when practiced between bones.

When the fight is between any of the tribal groups in the Eastern Arabophone Senhaja, the others of this group send their councillors and sheikhs, and Gzennaya as well sends councillors. In the meeting which follows Gzennaya plays the dominant rôle.

When the fight is within the Senhaja Sghir, the Sherif of Targuist betakes himself to the scene, accompanied by the councillors of the non-combatant tribes under his control. The Sherif collects the fine, keeping most of it, and distributes a small fraction of it among the councillors, who have nothing to say about the matter.

This rule does not apply to Ktama, which has never submitted to the authority of the Sherif. On account of its poverty and inaccessibility, Ktama is free from the intervention of councillors from other tribes; consequently it is in a constant state of turmoil, and banditry is common. This tribe has always been noted for its lawlessness, and has been generally avoided by travellers.

The tribes of the west, including the Western Arabophone Senhaja and the Ghomara, do not send representatives out to stop war and collect fines. This territory likewise enjoys a perennially bad reputation.

727 Some mention should be made of the ultimate disposal of money and other property taken by the various administrative bodies. Fines collected by the village council are kept by the moderator of that body for the entertainment of guests in the local mosque, for the purchase of tea, sugar, other foodstuffs, and candles for the council to use during its deliberations, and for cartridges and firearms to be used by members of the bone in time of war.

Fines collected by the council of the great are partly divided between the bones, partly given to the fkih or preceptor of the cantonal mosque, and partly expended upon the upkeep of, and hospitality in, this building.

Fines collected by the tribal council are divided equally among the fifths and then equally among cantons within the fifths. The moderator of each council of the great divides the money allotted his canton among the councillors who participated in the events which led to its collection, and among ordinary fighting men, if these were called upon to reënforce the councillors. The moderator distributes the money publicly at one time, giving more to the men who deported themselves bravely than to those who showed but mediocre interest in the fighting. Men who manifested cowardice and men who are absent from or come late to the division get nothing.
